

19. National Park Oze (国立公園 尾瀬)

Ministry of the Environment Oze protection \(尾瀬保護\) (Japanese・English・Chinese simplified ・Traditional Chinese・Korean) TEPCO \(東京電力\) (Japanese)

National Park Oze is the volcanic lake that has been filled with sediments for many years, making it Japan's largest flat grassland-like marsh.

There is a wooden path for people to walk in the marsh. In the early summer when the flowers of "Mizubasho", which is sung in songs that everyone knows, bloom, it is most popular and most crowded. The mine will be closed due to snow except from the end of May to the end of October.

Oze's mountain lodge requires reservations, so you cannot stay without prior reservation. Some rooms are private while others are shared among a large group of people. Cost is around 10,000 yen for one night with two meals included. Although it is a national park, most of it is owned by TEPCO as a water source for vinegar. The directly managed mountain lodges managed by the TEPCO subsidiary are also the mountain nose shibutu Sanso, Toden hut and Motoyu Sanso to the north of the view. It is located at Ozenuma Sanso in Ozenuma and can be reserved from the web.
